WEDNESDAY EVENING, NOV. 28, 1904.

Suicide at a Hotel, The police of Brooklyn had been unable up to a late hour last night to unravel the mystery of a beautiful girl's death in Delavan's Hotel at an early hour yesterday. Deserted by a man who represented himself as her husband, and who registered himself and the girl as "J. Stern and wile, city," the woman is thought to have committed suicide. The couple entered the hotel about midnight. The girl seemed reluctant to ac-company him. They were heard in a whispered argument, and then climbed the stairs to a room on the fourth floor, A few minutes later the man came down e stairs. "Are you going out?" asked oney Caussaire, the clerk of the hotel. "For a short while," replied the man.
"I will be back in a few minutes." The hotel clerk remarked the failure of the man to return, but he did not go to the room. Early yesterday Caussaire was passing through the hall when he detected gas. He forced the door of the woman's room. The girl lay upon the bed, and the room was filled with gas. Two jets were found to be turned on full, as was the electric light. The clerk called for a physician, but the girl died as he arrived. The relies found that the girl arrived. The police found that the girl had destroyed every trace that might lead to he identity. Her clothes were tailor-made. Her gray skirt, which was the only garment she removed before talling into insensibility, was tailor-made.

The national trustees of the McKinley Memorial Association, who have in charge the erection of the proposed great McKinley monument in Canton, Ohio, met in New York and examined the design presented by the official architect, H. VanBurer McGonigle. At the close of the meeting it was stated that the sum needed had not been raised and that changes which may be necessary will be made for financial rather than artistic reasons. The drawings show a massive structure, unlike either the Grant monument in New York or the Garfield monument in Cleveland. The situation on the top of a hill renders a beautiful approach possible and the opportunities of-fered gave the architect an idea which would require more money to execute than the trustees have in band They have now about $550,000 and need about $50,000 more to carry out the plans as they wish. The trustees, after a long discussion, during which they tried to plan changes in the design to enable their means to cover the expenses and not result in the added expenditures that marked the building of the Grant monu ment, appointed a committee to confer with the architect regarding the changes.
